RELEASED THE LADY.

But the Ungallant Judge Did It In His Own Peculiar Way.

There are many interesting references to Lord Chief Justice Campbell scattered about in the memoirs and biographies of his contemporaries. He was a man who inspired strong likes and dislikes. The famous Dr. Kenealy hated him. He declared that Campbell found luxury in the infliction of torture and had a ratilke, cruel look on his face, which settled immovably as the judge got older. The following

"I remember an incident which shows, although only in a slight degree, his natural lack of courtesy and consideration. A number of ladies crowded into one of the passages of Westminster hall for the purpose of getting a glimpse of the lord chief justice, who was then a celebrity of some note. As he passed his button caught in a beautiful lace bertha worn by one of his fair admirers. After a vain struggle to disengage himself were married recently at Asinippi, Mass., Campbell defficerately took out his penknife-everybody thought for the purpose of cutting off his button and releasing the lady. Not at all. He coolly cut a hole in her handsome face and passed on with his sweetest smfle."-Law Magazine and Review.

The Golden Heart

By BARBARA PHIPPS

has not made willing captives of a number of the daughters of the region invaded. During the war between the states many a Union soldier wooed and won a southern girl whose antagonism against the Union armies was very bitter. There seems to be something in the social relations that defies the horrors of war. Lieutenant Joaquin Molina, a young Spanish officer just out of his teens, was during the last years of the last century sent with his command to Cuba. Those were the days when General Weyler was attempting to crush the Cuban revolution by execution and imprisonment, and both he and Spanish soldiers were hated by the downtrodden Cubans.

Lieutenant Molina was encamped with his regiment near a sugar plantation owned by one Leandro Reyes. The officers were received at the plantation with civility, if not condiality, for Reyes did not care to antagonize them. though his sympathies were all for free Cubs. His daughter, Inez, a dark eyed beauty of seventeen, saw Molina, and notwithstanding she hated him as an enemy of her country she fell at once under the spell of love, a spell that was mutual, for Molina reciprocated.

True, the lady did not at once ac knowledge that she had given her heart to the young Spaniard. Indeed, she was struggling against her enthrallment.

It was not long before the two passed from a mere acquaintance to an acknowledgment of what they felt for each other. Inez, though she admitted her passion for the young officer, refused to become his betrothed the work of subjecting her countrymen to the yoke of the king of Spain. He pleaded for her to at least with hold her decision till the war had ended, but she replied that the end of the war, whatever it might be, would not alter her decision.

When Molina's regiment was ordered to Santiago there was a sad parting between the two, during which Inez gave way and told her lover that if Cuba achieved her independence he might come back and ask her again. Encouraged by this, he took one kiss, which she permitted, and tore himself away. He left her a parting gift-a little gold heart he wore on his watch Molina fought at Santiago, and when the end came he was shipped with his regiment to Spain. He asked for leave in order to visit Senorita Reyes, but, owing to the terms of the surrender, was unable to obtain one. He was obliged to defer seeing her again for a final reply to his proposition till he had gone to Spain. Then, if necessary, he would resign his commission in order to seek her.

When Lieutenant Molina reached Madrid he found it impossible to obtain a leave to return to America. He would have resigned his commission in order to go and claim Inez, but his mother dissuaded him.

"What!" she said. "Will you cross the Atlantic to claim a girl you are not sure of? If you resign from the will have a hard time if she wears me will not find it pleasant to live on the income furnished by your wife's father." Molina was thus persuaded to put off the matter so near his heart from day to day, till at last, having thought less and less of it, he drifted away from it altogether. He was thrown in with girls at home who desired the attentions of a young soldier who had been through the last struggle to preserve Cuba for Spain. In a few years he married one of them, and his Cuban romance was looked upon thereafter as a pleasant dream.

Fifteen years passed. Molina had in the meantime resigned from the army and had been elected a member of the have to pay at once.—Fliegende Blact cortes. Ten years after his marriage ter.

An Ironclad of 1585.

It is generally supposed that the first use of armor for battleships was during the Crimean war. As a matter of fact, the Dutch claim to have been the pioneers of ironclad building more than 300 years ago. During the famous siege of Antwerp by the Spantards in 1585, says J. R. Hale in "Famous Sea Fights," the people of the city built a huge flat bottomed warship, armed with heavy iron plates, which they named the Finis Belli, a boastful expression of the hope that on the ground that he was engaged in she would end the war. An old print of the Finis Belli shows a four masted ship with a high poop. But the vessel steered badly and eventually ran aground under the Spanish batteries and fell into the hands of their commander, the Duke of Parma. He kept the Finis Belli as a curiosity till the end of the slege.

A Summer Without Nights.

To the summer visitor in Sweden there is nothing more striking than the almost total absence of night. At Stockholm, the Swedish capital, the sun goes down a few minutes before 10 o'clock and rises again four hours later during a greater part of the month of June. But the four bours the sun lies hidden in the frozen north are not hours of darkness. The refraction of his rays as he passes around the north pole makes midnight as light as a cloudy midday and enables one to read the finest print without artificial light at any time during the "night."

Waste Not, Want Not.

The baby kept throwing her rattle on the floor until four-year-old Bobby grew weary with picking it up and refused to do so any longer. "But, dear, she is the only little sister you have." gently remonstrated his mother.
